

FAMOUS DETECTIVES

Sherlock Holmes : He was an infamous gentleman detective created by Sir Author Conan Doyle. Detective Holmes has been the inspiration for many, many investigative characters since his birth in the late 1800s. As a detective, he is known for his logical reasoning, early use of forensic science, and penchant for costume. Quote: “Elementary, my dear Watson ». This quote is representative of the character and his attitude.

Miss Marple : She was created by Agatha Christie. Jane Marple appeared in 12 novels and 20 short stories as an elderly spinster who fills up her free time resolving the mysteries in her home of St. Mary Mead. She is the counterpart to the gentlemen detective genre, a well-bred, well-educated older woman applying her keen wit, experience, and knowledge to the challenges of solving crime. Quote : « It’s what’s in yourself that makes you happy or unhappy.”

Hercule Poirot : Mr. Poirot was created by Agatha Christie alongside Miss Marple, this dignified Belgian detective solves crimes with the use of logical reasoning, or as he puts it ‘order and method’. Mr. Poirot also appeared on stage, in a number of film adaptations, several television shows, an animated series . Quote: “Chief Inspector, you have been thinking again. I have warned you of this before.”

Philip Marlowe : One of the most significant figures in the ‘hardboiled crime fiction’ genre, Marlowe was first created by Raymond Chandler in 1939 for « The Big Sleep ». Philip is the hard drinking, gruff yet oddly charming PI. His rough personality is rounded out with a thoughtful mind well versed in poetry, philosophy. He drinks whiskey and loves his coffee. Quote: “ I don’t mind if you don’t like my manners. They’re pretty bad. »

Sam Spade : Famously portrayed by Humphrey Bogart in one of the movie adaptations of his book, The Maltese Falcon, Sam Spade is not at all a gentlemen detective. He’s a shifty character capable of getting himself in and out of fixes with equal skill. Despite disliking his partner, he goes all out when the man is murdered to bring his killers to justice.

Columbo : A homicide detective for the LAPD, Peter Falk is a gregarious, slightly ruffled detective. He tends to talk too much and often seems to be a bit of an airhead, though in reality he has a keen attention to detail and a quick wit that helps him piece together the events of the crimes he investigates. Quote: “Perfect murder, sir? Oh, I’m sorry. There is no such thing as a perfect murder. That’s just an illusion.”

The Scoobydoo gang : The gang of teenaged friends and one oversized dog solve mysteries. These friends include : the couple Daphne and Fred, the intelligent and shy Velma, the fumbling and perpetually starving Shaggy and his trusted and trouble-maker Scooby. These teens have a knack for using fear of the supernatural to conceal criminal activity. Quote: “Velma, here’s the only thing you ever need to know about boys. They are stupid. If you give a boy two choices, a smart one and a stupid one, he will always make the stupid one every time »

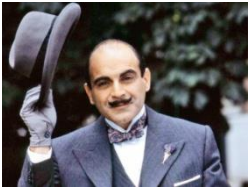

FAMOUS DETECTIVES

Sherlock Holmes : He was an infamous gentleman detective created by Sir Author Conan Doyle. Detective Holmes has been the inspiration for many, many investigative characters since his birth in the late 1800s. As a detective, he is known for his logical reasoning, early use of forensic science, and penchant for costume. Quote: “Elementary, my dear Watson ». This quote is representative of the character and his attitude.

Miss Marple : She was created by Agatha Christie. Jane Marple appeared in 12 novels and 20 short stories as an elderly spinster who fills up her free time resolving the mysteries in her home of St. Mary Mead. She is the counterpart to the gentlemen detective genre, a well-bred, well-educated older woman applying her keen wit, experience, and knowledge to the challenges of solving crime. Quote : « It’s what’s in yourself that makes you happy or unhappy.”

Hercule Poirot : Mr. Poirot was created by Agatha Christie alongside Miss Marple, this dignified Belgian detective solves crimes with the use of logical reasoning, or as he puts it ‘order and method’. Mr. Poirot also appeared on stage, in a number of film adaptations, several television shows, an animated series . Quote: “Chief Inspector, you have been thinking again. I have warned you of this before.”

Philip Marlowe : One of the most significant figures in the ‘hardboiled crime fiction’ genre, Marlowe was first created by Raymond Chandler in 1939 for « The Big Sleep ». Philip is the hard drinking, gruff yet oddly charming PI. His rough personality is rounded out with a thoughtful mind well versed in poetry, philosophy. He drinks whiskey and loves his coffee. Quote: “ I don’t mind if you don’t like my manners. They’re pretty bad. »

Sam Spade : Famously portrayed by Humphrey Bogart in one of the movie adaptations of his book, The Maltese Falcon, Sam Spade is not at all a gentlemen detective. He’s a shifty character capable of getting himself in and out of fixes with equal skill. Despite disliking his partner, he goes all out when the man is murdered to bring his killers to justice.

Columbo : A homicide detective for the LAPD, Peter Falk is a gregarious, slightly rumpled detective. He tends to talk too much and often seems to be a bit of an airhead, though in reality he has a keen attention to detail and a quick wit that helps him piece together the events of the crimes he investigates. Quote: “Perfect murder, sir? Oh, I’m sorry. There is no such thing as a perfect murder. That’s just an illusion.”

The Scoobydoo gang : The gang of teenaged friends and one oversized dog solve mysteries. These friends include : the couple Daphne and Fred, the intelligent and shy Velma, the fumbling and perpetually starving Shaggy and his trusted and trouble-maker Scooby. These teens have a knack for using fear of the supernatural to conceal criminal activity. Quote: “Velma, here’s the only thing you ever need to know about boys. They are stupid. If you give a boy two choices, a smart one and a stupid one, he will always make the stupid one every time »

